Midland Valley Agriculture Program Recognized

GRANITEVILLE, SC ..... The Midland Valley High School Agricultural Education Department has been recognized as the outstanding program in the Lower State Region for 2010 by the South Carolina Association of Agricultural Educators, according to John W. Parris, state director of public affairs for the organization.

Jeremy Brooks, Agricultural Education instructor at Midland Valley High School, received the prestigious award during a recognition ceremony at Clemson University recently.

In addition to an outstanding high school FFA chapter, the program was recognized last year as the top Adult Agricultural Education program in the South Eastern United States by the National Association of Agricultural Educators.

The SC Association of Agricultural Educators is a professional organization dedicated to providing excellent educational opportunities for students and adults interested in or involved in agribusiness.

For more information regarding the agriculture program at Midland Valley High School, contact Jeremy Brooks at the high school, (803) 593-7142 or visit the agriculture program website at www.midlandvalleyffa.com.
